Widely known for his thorough, candid approach to teaching God's Word, John MacArthur is a popular author and conference speaker and has served as pastor-teacher of Grace Community Church in Sun Valley, California since 1969. John and his wife, Patricia, have four grown children and fourteen grandchildren. John's pulpit ministry has been extended around the globe through his media ministry, Grace to You, and its satellite offices in seven countries. In addition to producing daily radio programs for nearly 2,000 English and Spanish radio outlets worldwide, Grace to You distributes books, software, audiotapes, and CDs by John MacArthur. John is president of The Master's College and Seminary and has written hundreds of books and study guides, each one biblical and practical. Best-selling titles include The Gospel According to Jesus, Truth War, The Murder of Jesus, Twelve Ordinary Men, Twelve Extraordinary Women, and The MacArthur Study Bible, a 1998 ECPA Gold Medallion recipient. This intriguing book ends with a very useful chapter for the listener to sermons, reminding them even of the value of being physically fit for the ordeal! It is, however, primarily for preachers both actual and potential. In the short term there is very useful material here. It can be very practical with even an idiosyncratic suggestion of the exact size a pulpit should be, which according to the author is 42 inches high with a very slight slant! But more seriously there are some illustrations of sermons prepared, a glimpse into the preacher's notebook and some very helpful answers to questions. There are seven 'Be's' which every preacher could do well to memorize. Although it deals with some very significant issues, it is easily read, often, as befits a good sermon book, with illustrations from many walks of life including golf and television detective stories. There is an interesting history of expository preaching down the centuries. It includes very helpful advice but with a constant reminder that the preacher should be himself or herself with naturalness and the use of the personality given by God. The reader must be selective. Many busy pastors who are also preachers would quail at the use of time. A person who is a preacher without pastoral responsibilities could well spend his whole week in preparation, but many of us who have this responsibility week by week are also committed to a busy life of pastoral care and the two must wed. Therefore the reader will be wise in drawing from this book helpful guidelines without assuming that no preaching can be effective unless every detail in the book is carried out. It is vital to start where the book starts, with its understanding of the doctrine of Scripture. We are reminded of some of the present challenges to that doctrine, not least in experience-centred religion and extra-biblical illumination. There is a lovely quotation from Martin Luther who likens people with views from outside Scripture as being like swarms of bees not knowing where to land. John Stott encourages contemporary preachers to be bibline in their thinking. Here too is a reminder that the Bible is not only our inspiration for preaching but should provide the material for our counselling. Often effective preaching eliminates the need for too much counselling. There is a healthy reminder that the preacher is to be a man of God, and the book includes a very helpful exposition from 1 Timothy 6 on that theme. In the actual preparation of a sermon the book has the advantage and disadvantage of having different authors. There is inevitably therefore some repetition but it gains from being able to look at preparation from different angles. We are reminded of the great importance of careful exegesis while not forgetting that we are not intent on making theologians out of those who sit in the pews so much as good Christians. There is a very helpful booklist with 750 titles. Some of the vital matters in sermon preparation are dealt with carefully. It is important to think in depth about the title, the introduction, the conclusion and the use of illustration. Many of us will find encouragement in the emphasis on illustration. There is a danger of expository preaching being set over against anecdotal preaching. Certainly this book will reinforce the absolute primacy of letting the Bible speak, of drawing out the message within the context and not basing our sermons on stories or experiences. But it is essential that every sermon has illustrative matter to link it with everyday life and to help concentration. Beware of letting the illustration dictate the text. Equally beware of a sermon which becomes correct but arid. We are reminded in this book of the value of the occasional topical exposition. There are dangers here for we can ride our hobby-horses easily and Scripture should be preached in toto, yet there are occasions when events dictate a message applicable to the moment and there are the occasions within the Christian year where obviously a congregation comes already expectant and their minds set in a particular way. However we approach the exposition, this book will help us to remember the sheer privilege of preaching. Amongst the many helpful quotations is this from Martin Lloyd-Jones: 'To me, the work of preaching is the highest and the greatest and the most glorious calling to which anyone can ever be called.' Though I am not a preacher, I decided to read Rediscovering Expository Preaching in an attempt to discover exactly what expository preaching is and compare it to the type of teaching practiced in most modern churches. That this book was written by John MacArthur and the faculty of Master's seminary is a strong endorsement of its value, for that institution is known as being one that upholds the value of expositional teaching. I hoped also that I would learn some techniques and disciplines that would enrich my personal Bible study as well as my writing. I was not disappointed. Become a Patron Effective exposition of the Bible requires four steps and each of these receives careful analysis in this book. The steps are: Personal preparation. This involves ensuring that the expositor is walking with the Lord. He must be dedicated to studying the Word and to prayer as well as other spiritual disciplines. Proper exposition cannot be done apart from the Spirit who alone can illumine the text. Processing the Biblical text. This involves using study tools, engaging in hermeneutics and exegesis and generally drawing the meaning from the text in a biblical manner. Pulling the message together. This involves determining the central ideas of a text and drawing up an outline. It involves an effective introduction and conclusion and moving from exegesis to exposition. Preaching the exposition. This involves actually delivering the message in an effective manner. Each of these steps is explained in sufficient, though not burdensome detail. Nine authors combined to write the nineteen chapters, and while some are more effective communicators than others, each does a good job of handling his topic. While this book is clearly aimed at the aspiring pastor or to pastors who are attempting to make their messages expository, there is still value in reading it for people who are not pastors. Many of the principles of hermeneutics and exegesis are important for all believers to understand thoroughly in order to effectively interpret and apply the Word of God. While not all of the information will pertain to these readers, those parts can be passed over without losing the value of the book. I recommend this book for the targeted audience (pastors and aspiring pastors) but also for lay people who are interested in learning Biblical methods of hermeneutics and exegesis. That being said, there are other options that may be better-suited for these people, such as How To Interpret the Bible For Yourself by Richard Mayhue.
